

DAILY NEWS

Ashton Kutcher lands in hospital after imitating Steve Job's fruit-only diet while filming biopic

The 'Two and a Half Men' star says 'terrifying' experience left him hospitalized for pancreatic problems while filming 'Jobs.'

BY MARGARET EBY / NEW YORK DAILY NEWS

SATURDAY, JANUARY 26, 2013, 12:34 PM

Who knew Ashton Kutcher was a method actor?

In order to get ready for his role playing Apple co-founder Steve Jobs, who died of pancreatic cancer in 2011, Kutcher adhered to the same fruit only diet that Jobs supposedly followed.

But while preparing to film scenes for 'Jobs,' which premiered at Sundance Friday, the strict fruitarian regimen landed Kutcher in the hospital with serious pancreas problems.

"The fruitarian diet can lead to like severe issues," Kutcher told USA Today.

Steve Wozniak, played in the film by Josh Gad, criticized his portrayal as 'totally wrong'

"I went to the hospital two days before we started shooting the movie. I was doubled over in pain."

"My pancreas levels were like completely out of whack. It was really terrifying, considering everything."

'Jobs,' which is due out in April, has been criticized by Apple co-founder Steve Wozniak for veering too far from the truth.

"Totally wrong," Wozniak commented about a clip from the film on Gizmodo.

"I'm not even sure what it's getting at."